Sallant Skirmish at Tuscumbi

While the work of retaliation, justly meritcel by the burning of the steamer and capture of cargo, offeres, crew and passengers, was going on, the party on shore was fired upon from the woods. After setting Corcora's Landing on fire the De Soto drifted down the stream a few miles to Concordia Landing, where were several houses. After throwing several shells through a warehouse, intending to set fire to it, finding it impossible men were landed, pickets thrown out and houses, stores and warehouse destroyed by fire. All had previously been deserted by their owners. The contents of the houses were removed to the

On the return from this cruise the De Soto took on five bales of cotton at McNell's Landing. Some more was seen at various points on the way down, but it had been removed. The results of the expedition in the glory of which Capt. Nelli and Acting Master Lord should equally share, are five steamers captured, supposed to be in the contraband trade, five prisoners taken as hostages, nine negroes captured and forty-two buildings destroyed. This for an A 2 dipatch boat, carrying captured and forty-two buildings destroyed.

This for an A 3 dispatch boat, carrying twenty-eight men and two 12-pound brass howitzers, is not so bad. When it hadgone, part of the distance to Concordia Landing, Capt, Neill was importuned by some of his officers to seture, as it was hazardous to venture so fig. from the lines. His repliy was "Big of the or find the Lake City or her crow, and massengers, provided they are north."
